Happy Losar! Tashi Delek!

Dear Friends,

We celebrate the Tibetan New Year this month with gratefulness and prayer. And we are excited to note that this year is the 20th anniversary of Ligmincha Institute!

This issue of Voice of Clear Light includes an excerpt from Rinpoche's moving Jan. 1, 2012, webcast with advice for the new year. In "Sangha Sharing," Lourdes Hinojosa talks about her live translation of Rinpoche's webcast teachings into Spanish. A slideshow features photos from Rinpoche's recent travels and retreats in Columbia, Chile, Peru and Virginia. The issue also includes an announcement of a paid position available at Ligmincha, as well as highlights of some exciting upcoming events.

Some signs of the great energy being generated this anniversary year are the many wonderful new retreats and events coming up at Ligmincha! See the listing of retreats at Serenity Ridge in this issue

Words of Advice for the New Year

Print this article / Print full issue

An Edited Excerpt from Geshe Tenzin Wangyal Rinpoche's Jan. 1 Webcast

For this new year, recognize that human life is very, very precious. And if you look at your own lives, each one is very precious. In the teachings we also say that human life is very precious. Indeed, it's true. Sometimes it feels sad to see how we waste this precious life, this precious gift we have.

One strong way we waste our precious life is through worrying. It does not make any sense to worry as much as we do. Sometimes if you look with a calm mind, a more open, clear mind, you can see that of course there's no reason to worry. Worry is not some true situation that needs to be changed in reality—worry is like an addiction. If it's not topic number one, we will be worrying about topic number two. If one is more conscious about that, then I think we will begin to not waste our lives worrying.

We can also waste our precious lives by getting caught up in conflicts. Of course it's natural for human beings to get into conflicts—between nations, or within the community or in family or other personal relationships. But these conflicts are meant to be resolved quickly, rather than our getting caught up in them and going deep inside them. You can see how much energy you lose, how much energy you make others lose and how much energy we collectively lose together. All of those energies can be used to serve other human beings as well as to enhance your own life. If you're not doing anything in particular, then that time can be used just to be in peace: to feel that beautiful silence that we have access to in every moment, the deep stillness that can nourish us, the warmth we all have in our hearts and between two people. This warmth not only heals your own sickness, your own pain; it can also help heal the collective pain. Even if someone is creating conflict, you can choose not to contribute. With that warmth, you can give some opportunity to overcome that conflict by not participating.

In this new year, just see how you can avoid wasting your time, how you can avoid wasting your energy. Throughout the year, think about this precious life and what you want to do with it, how you want to generate a sense of peace within yourself. Give attention to your health and well-being, to your family and friends, to the world and the community that of you are a part of, to the kind of benefit you can bring in a collective sense. Each one of us is in a position to do something that no one else can do. There's some specific gift that you have, that you can provide to help others and yourself. Find out what those things are, because there is no one else in the world who is in a position to do that. You are the only one. So be aware, be awake. Take some initiative to do those things for the welfare of yourself and others.

Lourdes Hinojosa on Translating for Rinpoche

Sangha member Lourdes Hinojosa, a longtime student from Mexico, has for many years done simultaneous translation of the teachings at Serenity Ridge. Recently, she began translating Tenzin Wangyal Rinpoche's live webcasts into Spanish. The recent January webcast also was translated simultaneously into French by Dominique Monchardé. We thank them for this great offering. Rinpoche encourages others to pursue the goal of simultaneously translating the live webcasts into their own languages.

In sharing her personal experience of translating for Rinpoche in this issue, Lourdes gave us the idea of inviting YOU to share some of your stories of connection to Rinpoche in VOCL. We all have so many gifts that we are thankful for through our connection to Tenzin Wangyal Rinpoche and the Bon tradition. We welcome your voice in this year of celebration! Please email us (Aline and Jeff Fisher) with your story, poetry and pictures as we mark this beautiful and powerful year for all of us.

Lourdes writes:

Ever since I met Rinpoche, back in 1999, I felt a strong inner calling to help make everyone around him understand what he was saying—his words, the precious Bon Buddhist teachings, his message always full of insight and understanding of our Western ways.

The live simultaneous translation process began eight years ago at Ligmincha Institute. I was deeply moved by Patricia, a sangha member from Mexico who always attended the summer retreat and sat in the first row. Back then, she couldn't speak any English at all. She just sat there, full of devotion toward Rinpoche and receiving the blessings of being close to her teacher. In the gompas, as I listened to Rinpoche's teachings, I said to myself, "It is inconceivable that she is sitting right in front of him and cannot understand a word. She must receive the precious teachings in her own language!"

Then, out of the generosity of several sangha members, we acquired our first simultaneous translation set, even though it was second-hand. (Later on, a brand new set arrived.) It was like a miracle for our Spanish-speaking sangha members. Others began attending the summer retreat and other special retreats now that translation was available.

Years went by, and Rinpoche, always expanding his energy and wisdom for the benefit of others, started his series of webcasts. It immediately came to my mind: "This can also be translated, and many more people will receive Rinpoche's teachings and guidance in their own language!" So I opened an account on Justin.tv and figured out how webcast viewers could both see Rinpoche's live image and at the same time listen to his teachings in Spanish. I came up with the idea of using two computers: one transmitting Rinpoche's live image with earplugs hooked in, and the other receiving the image with microphone plugged in.

And it worked! I let all Mexican sangha members know about this. We began to gather at all Bon centers throughout Mexico to watch and listen to the webcasts together as a sangha. From one single computer, many could receive the teachings and practice together. Word started to spread and many others, including friends and family, also began to benefit from these translated webcasts.

Whenever Rinpoche recites mantras and prayers or gives transmissions during webcasts, I unplug my earplugs so the sound of his voice can be heard during the Spanish transmission of the webcast. In that way, nothing is missing.

To have the best quality video while at the same time listening to the webcast in Spanish, viewers can open two sites—the Ustream site with the original webcast for video only (with the sound cancelled) and the Justin.tv site (with sound fully open but the image minimized, just to listen to Rinpoche's words in Spanish).

So far, there have been 14 videos with more than 17,016 web hits, including many regular followers. The videos remain available for anyone wanting to watch and listen to Rinpoche's webcasts in Spanish.

I feel deep love and gratitude toward my root lama, Tenzin Wangyal Rinpoche. It gives me profound joy and satisfaction, and a sense of purpose, to be able to help him get his message through to many Spanish-speaking people.

A Question for Rinpoche

Easing Into Spaciousness

In January, Tricycle Magazine invited Tenzin Wangyal Rinpoche to host a monthlong book club discussion group on Tricycle's website related to his latest book,

Tibetan Yogas of Body, Speech and Mind

. The workshop is over, but you can view the Qs and As and listen to a related audio interview here

During the discussion, a student asked this question of Rinpoche:

Q: How can one become more comfortable with a sense of spaciousness during meditation practice?

A: Generally speaking, experiences of space and openness can be very empowering and strengthening for some people. For others, these experiences can be very comforting, peaceful and blissful. For still others, connecting with a sense of spaciousness can feel threatening at times, because it requires letting go of the pain body, of one's limited, conditional identity. During meditation practice you can ease this discomfort by progressively letting go of things, allowing yourself to connect and find comfort with whatever small amount of spaciousness you are experiencing, so you are gradually opening to the space, rather than immediately going fully into it.
